Wrik Sen / May 2 2012

The republic of Singapore located in Malay Peninsula has managed to attract far and many from around the world, when it comes doing business, and of course experiencing the city state as a tourist. This has made this place one of the most lucrative, but also one of the most expensive places in the world to buy residential space in, albeit every bit the money's worth. The Montigo Resorts Waterfront now has sea-facing private residences for sale, in the Nongsa, Batam area, where exclusivity and peace of mind are the most guaranteed aspects of one's stay, other than the premium modern residence itself.

Montigo Resorts and Waterfront Residences settings and ambience

The location and setting of the Montigo private residences is such, that the moving to and fro between mainland port and the private residences, the Tanah Merah Ferry Terminal, is a joyride in itself. After landing at the port, there is a special counter where one has to check-in before they are taken away on the Sealine Yacht to the island. Once on the main island, there is another 10-minute journey in a private car to the resort, where the exclusive and rather tranquil 6,600 sq ft. private residences are based. Each of these properties is known for the vast expanse of exposure to the South China Sea, and the tranquil conditions it has during most parts of the year. Since there is hardly any population around the sea region, there is the much needed privacy for each resident of the place. Spread over 12 hectares of green land and close to 1 kilometer of beachfront exposure, there is always an ambience of peace and total withdrawal of any hustle-bustle of modern city life.
